

I am flatly opposed to any FCC rule changes that would result in fewer owners of broadcast media of all types. It is curious to me that the matter of broadcast media ownership should even be on the table. The equation is simple: fewer owners, fewer points of view presented. For the FCC to risk diversification of opinion to meet the needs of business profit in the private sector would be a travesty. This issue is not one in which the average American can access through existing media sources or even has the time in this period of war to gather information and analyse. In that light there may not be large public participation in this debate so it is all the more important that the FCC protects the rights of the airways owners, the American public. Don't weaken our rights under pressure from business!